Sounding Society:
A History of Power, Protest, and Identity in Brazil Through Music & Art

NEW COURSE

Fall 2019 Wednesdays 4:00-6:40pm
HIST 556/MUSIC 561 (3 units)

Professor Kevin Delgado, Music
delgado@sdsu.edu

Professor Erika Robb Larkins, Anthropology and Sociology
erika.larkins@sdsu.edu

This Arts Alive SDSU Interdisciplinary Collaborative Teaching Program links two existing classes, History 556, The History of Brazil with Music 561 Ethnomusicology Area Studies: Brazil. Adopting an interdisciplinary lens, the course will explore the role of music and the arts in contesting subjugation and marginalization in Brazil. In particular, we will use music spanning Brazilian history, including Afro-Brazilian religious music, carnival/samba, capoeira, foreign-influenced rock, tropicália, MPB, blocos afro, sertenejo, hip-hop, and favela funk to understand how different artists have engaged in direct critique of power structures and implicitly challenged the status quo though the expression of counter-hegemonic identities.
A History of Power, Protest, and Identity in Brazil Through Music & Art

This Arts Alive SDSU Interdisciplinary Collaborative Teaching Program links two existing classes, History 556, The History of Brazil with Music 561 Ethnomusicology Area Studies: Brazil. Adopting an interdisciplinary lens, the course will explore the role of music and the arts in contesting subjugation and marginalization in Brazil. In particular, we will use music spanning Brazilian history, including Afro-Brazilian religious music, carnival/samba, capoeira, foreign-influenced rock, tropicália, MPB, blocos afro, sertenejo, hip-hop, and favela funk to understand how different artists have engaged in direct critique of power structures and implicitly challenged the status quo though the expression of counter-hegemonic identities.

Fall 2019 Wednesdays 4:00-6:40pm
HIST 556/MUSIC 561 (3 units)

Professor Kevin Delgado, Music
delgado@sdsu.edu

Professor Erika Robb Larkins, Anthropology and Sociology
erika.larkins@sdsu.edu